SANTA CRUZ — Santa Cruz looks to offer more transit 'carrots'. Santa Cruz has among the state's highest rates of bike commuters, according to an analysis of five years of federal data. According to city Transportation Planner Claire Fliesler, Santa Cruz ranks as having the state's second highest citywide rate of cycling commuters, at 10.2 percent. When it comes to the downtown, however, the city says it can do better in getting some 4,000 workers out of their cars. Thursday, the city Downtown Commission unanimously chose its preferred package of alternative transportation incentives aimed at downtown workers, encouraging bike and bus use as top options. The move came in the wake of the Santa Cruz City Council's approval in September to begin setting aside $300,000 a year for so-called transportation demand management efforts. Funding will come out of increased downtown parking rates that are in the process of going into effect in coming weeks. The commission's favored proposal, which will need final City Council sign-off, comes with a request that the council increase the new transportation demand management efforts by more than an additional $200,000 to expand a proposed limited "Eco-Pass" bus voucher program to all downtown commuters, instead of just some. Were the council to opt to keep to its planned budget, the commission endorsed spending the $300,000 first on a "multi-modal" package of transit incentives, versus focusing on either bus or bicycle usage. The programs are designed with an eye toward reducing greenhouse gas emissions, traffic congestion and parking demand. The proposed transportation demand management program could mean that workers will be able to download a smartphone app to track and log their trips in exchange for prizes and other incentives and have access to at least 1,728 of free monthly bus passes handed out for a year on a first-come, first-served basis. The city also would offer 100 BikeLink cards, each with $20 of preloaded credit, for safe bicycle parking and 200 subsidized Jump bike-share memberships. The program would also spend up to $20,000 on carpooling subsidies, as well as set asides for educational workshops, bike training sessions and marketing.

Nation: Four Charged in Plot to Attack Muslim Community

Three men and a high school student were charged with plotting to bomb an upstate New York Muslim community, authorities said Tuesday. The four people, who are residents of the Rochester area, are accused of plotting to attack a rural Muslim community known as Islamberg, according to news reports. It's not known when the attack was going to take place. Brian Colaneria, 20; Andrew Crysel, 18; and Vincent Vetromile, 19, were charged with weapons possession and conspiracy, according to the Associated Press. A 16-year-old high school student was charged as a juvenile. At the time of their arrests this weekend, the men had access to more than 20 rifles and shotguns and three homemade explosives, Greece, New York, Police Chief Patrick Phelan said at a press conference. The investigation was sparked by a comment the 16-year-old made during school lunch, Phelan said. After interviewing the student and others, law enforcement eventually discovered the plot. Police searched five locations and seized 23 weapons, as well as electronic devices such as phones and computers. Some of the weapons were legally owned by relatives of the suspects, according to the AP. Three improvised explosive devices wrapped in duct tape were found at the juvenile suspect's house.

Bizarre TWITTER CEO SAYS MARK ZUCKERBERG ONCE KILLED A GOAT WITH A STUN GUN AND SERVED IT TO HIM FOR DINNER. Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey says Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg once killed a goat with a stun gun and served it to him for dinner. In an interview with Rolling Stone published Wednesday, Dorsey was asked to recount the most memorable experience he's had with Zuckerberg. "Well, there was a year when he was only eating what he was killing," the Twitter CEO said. "He made goat for me for dinner. He killed the goat." Pressing for more details, the interviewer asked Dorsey whether he was present and the method Zuckerberg utilized for the killing. "He killed it before. I guess he kills it. He kills it with a laser gun and then the knife. Then they send it to the butcher," Dorsey responded. A...laser gun?" the reporter asked. Dorsey replied: "I don't know. A stun gun. They stun it, and then he knifed it. Then they send it to a butcher. Evidently, in Palo Alto there's a rule or regulation that you can have six livestock on any lot of land, so he had six goats at the time." The tech CEO went on to explain that he didn't actually eat the goat because it was cold, despite being cooked in an oven. "He puts the goat down. It was cold," Dorsey said. "That was memorable. I don't know if it went back in the oven. I just ate my salad." Although Dorsey didn't reveal when the goat dinner occurred, Mashable has speculated that the incident likely happened in 2011, the year the Facebook CEO vowed he would eat only animals that he kills with his own hands.
